It Pays to Pay Forward!

Editor:

With all the negative stuff we seem to hear so much about, here's how a small act of kindness can turn into something bigger.

At the checkout line at the supermarket recently, my husband and I offered to let the gentleman behind us go ahead of us in the checkout line. We were not in a hurry, and the gentleman had only two or three items. The gentleman smiled, thanked us, and moved ahead of us in the line. We thought nothing more about it, until it came time for us to pay our grocery bill. Turns out that the gentleman we let go ahead of us in line paid for most of our bill! He gave the checker a $100 bill to pay for his few items, the remainder of the money, his change, he had the checker credit to our bill. What a nice surprise!

Ironically, when we first pulled into the parking lot of the supermarket before shopping, I noticed that the license plate of the car parked in front of us had a personalized plate which said, through letters and numbers, "pay it forward!" It makes you just want to say, hmmm ...

Kathleen Brubaker, McKinleyville

Fourth District

Editor:

I am a Democrat living in Humboldt's Fourth Supervisorial District. Although we have two capable Democratic candidates running, I choose to vote for Natalie Arroyo because of her breadth of experience, her commitment to environmental issues and the effectiveness of her campaign organization.

That last is particularly important because the third candidate in the Fourth District race, a proven conservative, should not be allowed to win. Humboldt County deserves to finally have a progressive majority on its board of supervisors.

Natalie Arroyo can win and provide that majority. Her election, joined with Steve Madrone's re-election from the Fifth District, will give our community the forward-looking leadership it deserves.

Pam Service, Eureka

Editor:

Natalie Arroyo has been endorsed by the Yurok Tribal Council, U.S. Congressman Jared Huffman, California Assemblymember Jim Wood and many elected officials throughout Humboldt County. She has earned support from unions, such as Operating Engineers Local Union Number 3 District 40, International Association of Heat and Frost Insulators and Allied Workers Local 16, United Food and Commercial Workers Local 5 and the Carpenters Local 751.

Her work in the field of environment and public health has earned her the respect and support Of the Redwood Coalition for Climate and Environmental Responsibility and Health-care for All Humboldt.

Natalie Arroyo has an excellent track record during her nearly eight-year tenure as a Eureka City Councilmember and her volunteer work shows her continuous dedication to our community.

Natalie Arroyo is going to make a fine Humboldt County supervisor for the Fourth District, and I encourage everyone to vote for her in the upcoming election.

Rick Pelren, Fortuna

Editor:

I'm asking you to vote for Natalie Arroyo for Fourth District Supervisor because she is the best candidate for the office. As a professional planner, I follow many public meetings and Natalie rises to the top as a talented and charismatic leader ready to take on the demands of this job.

Natalie has the intelligence and visionary leadership needed to bring our County into the 21st century. She understands the available policy tools to steer our region toward a livable future — one that is characterized by a thriving economy, abundant housing, vibrant downtowns, and convenient transportation options. And with her experience in natural resources, our rural working lands will be protected.

Natalie is the type of person you want in the room during a long, tense meeting. She is tactful, patient and listens to all sides. I can't wait to see what she can accomplish as supervisor.

Stevie Luther, Eureka

Fifth District

Editor:

Humboldt County is a unique and beautiful place. We have so much to look forward to. It is time for a change. We need a supervisor who is responsive to our communities needs and has the vision and experience to bring us together. Larry Doss is that person.

He Loves Humboldt County and has our best interests in mind. He has the knowledge and passion to work with all sides on issues that affect us. Larry Doss is endorsed by a wide range of public and private officials and groups, as well as many Humboldt County residents. Larry Doss is committed to and has a sincere passion for Humboldt County's future. He will get the job done.

Please join me in voting Larry Doss, the next Fifth District supervisor for Humboldt County on June 7.

Heather Vina, McKinleyville

The Pecking Order

Watching the pecking order firsthand
At the bird feeder under the awning
Outside my kitchen window where,
This day, finches rule the roost.
The males sport bright red feathers,
Flashing flags sure to attract females.

Along comes a slender siskin, a diminutive
Tyrant who drives the larger birds away.
But soon the finches return to reclaim
Some of the space. She tolerates them
Skirmishing constantly around the feeder,
Until one drives the others off.

How like we humans, these feathered beings!

— Felice Pace

Editor:

I urge voters in the Fifth Supervisorial District to re-elect Steve Madrone. His list of accomplishments during his current term is long and impressive and too numerous for a complete listing here.

In addition to voting for wage and benefit increases for deputy sheriffs and securing funding for local fire districts, he has advocated for major road repairs; voted for removal of the Klamath Dams; got the board of supervisors to support $14 million funding for improved salmon restoration and flood protection; worked to alleviate problems with drug houses near schools; supported the creation of a McKinleyville town center and many other important quality-of-life issues for Humboldt County residents.

Madrone is a proven, experienced leader with a track record of finding practical ways to approach Humboldt County's complex issues. We need to keep him on the board of supervisors.

Vote Madrone on June 7.

John Webb, Trinidad

Auditor-Controller

Editor:

Cheryl Dillingham has the integrity and experience to successfully serve Humboldt County as auditor-controller. Cheryl has generously dedicated her time and talents to Jacoby Creek Land Trust. Under her leadership, the trust has partnered with the community to steward land and water in the Jacoby Creek valley. Her extensive knowledge and creativity propelled the organization forward during the pandemic. I feel honored to have been mentored by her; she has taught me a great deal in terms of problem solving and community relations in a clear and direct manner. She leads by example and gets the work done.

Our community relies upon its finances running smoothly to ensure that county government and agency partners are able to provide critical services to residents. Cheryl Dillingham will ensure this happens. I whole-heartedly endorse Cheryl Dillingham for Humboldt County Auditor-Controller.

Stephanie Mietz, Arcata

Superior Court Judge

Editor:

I am writing in support of Ben McLaughlin who is running for superior court judge.

Ben holds all the qualities for an excellent judge. He is equitable and experienced. He practiced both civil and criminal law. Ben held positions as a deputy prosecutor and deputy public defender. He is an expert in evidence — an absolute necessity. With his experience, he could hit the ground running. Additionally, Ben is humble. Although he is an excellent attorney, he does not seek out recognition for his efforts. He works hard for his clients and not for accolades.

Finally, Ben is compassionate. During a trial, he had a client from Southern California who could not afford a hotel. Ben used his own money and paid for a hotel room so the client would not have to sleep in his car. I support Ben's candidacy and hope you will, too.

Here's the CAP

County releases long-awaited draft Climate Action Plan

By Elaine Weinreb
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

The long-awaited draft Climate Action Plan (CAP) was released on April 21. Technically, this is a second draft: The first was released in 2021 but quickly rescinded for additional work. Unfortunately, this 2022 edition cannot be considered complete either, since most of the calculations are in the appendices, which are still being worked on.

Nonetheless, environmentalists are hopeful the document will come to serve as a sort of to-do list for local governments in the effort to fight the climate crisis.

Created jointly by the county and its seven incorporated cities, the plan's purpose is to combat climate change by finding realistic ways to limit the production of greenhouse gases. While by far the biggest culprit is carbon dioxide, other gases such as methane and hydrofluorocarbons (refrigerant gases) also contribute to global warming. Carbon dioxide is the product of combustion — primarily from the gasoline engines that run traditional cars and trucks; but also natural gas or propane in home furnaces, water heaters and cookstoves; oil and gas that power industry; woodstoves that heat homes; and a variety of combustible products used to power electrical plants and keep Humboldt County's lights on.

Methane comes from both decaying organic matter and the digestive emissions of cattle. Refrigerant gases are only a small portion of the mix but also retain atmospheric heat thousands of times more efficiently than carbon dioxide. Interestingly, these gases were invented by chemical companies as a replacement for earlier ozone-eating gases, which had threatened to wreak havoc with the atmosphere.

Electricity produced by renewable sources — such as solar, wind, and moving water — is considered “clean energy.” The basic idea is to replace combustion, whatever its source, with electrical energy wherever possible. (Wood waste is also considered a form of clean energy by the Redwood Coast Energy Authority, but many environmentalists question this designation, as it does involve combustion.) Closely allied with this idea is city planning that reduces the amount of driving that people need to do on a daily basis to get to work, school, services and recreation.

Driving can be reduced if people have what they need within walking distance of their homes, or if good transit services are available and streets are designed to be safe and friendly for bicyclists and pedestrians.

All plants, but especially trees, soak up carbon dioxide from the atmosphere when they grow, and give it back to the atmosphere when they burn or rot. Therefore, one of the most efficient ways of taming greenhouse gas emissions is to encourage the growth of forests, which Humboldt County has plenty of.

The state now considers greenhouse gases to be a pollutant that must be identified during environmental review and mitigated wherever possible. Every time a project is proposed, it must go through an environmental review process. Rather than calculate the amount of greenhouse gases that each individual project would produce, the state instead allows local governments to come up with calculations for the whole community, decide what steps will limit the formation of the greenhouse gases, and then codify these limits. Then, moving forward, a project must demonstrate that it will conform to these measures to be approved.

As it is easier to build efficiency into new projects than to retrofit old ones, the plan emphasizes the future and sets target dates that correspond to those already built into state law.

Since transportation is the biggest offender, a major goal of the CAP is replacement of gas-powered vehicles with battery-powered or hydrogen fuel cell powered electric vehicles (known as Zero Emission Vehicles or ZEVs). One of the CAP's goals is that 34 percent of all Humboldt's passenger vehicles be ZEVs by 2030.

To encourage this switch, a lot more public charging stations must be built and new building construction must have electrical systems robust enough to support charging stations at home or at the workplace — or even on streetlight poles. (The idea is to replace the traditional streetlights with LED lights, which would leave enough excess energy to support chargers.)

The state is already requiring truck manufacturers to increase their sales of ZEVs each year between 2024 and 2030. This necessitates the installation of various types

The support of most county department heads, city officials, supervisors, non-profit agencies, state agencies and businesses attending Cheryl's announcement is powerful testimony that there are serious problems with the current Auditor-Controller's performance.

Cheryl is our chance to fix three years of mistakes by the Auditor-Controller

Cheryl Dillingham, current finance director of Rio Dell, worked 12 years in the Auditor-Controller's office, and two years as Assistant CAO. She is stepping up to offer solutions to the deep financial chaos the county is currently facing. Her experience, track record, and broad support are the foundation for Cheryl to get Humboldt County's financial accounting and reporting in order.

of charging stations suitable for trucks that use fuel cells or batteries.

Humboldt Transit Authority will also be encouraged to purchase more electric buses.

As a side effect to this transition, pollutants such as carbon monoxide, engine oil, antifreeze and other hazardous substances will be reduced, resulting in a cleaner environment and improved health.

Infill development would also be highly valued under the draft plan. The cities and the county are expected to encourage mixed-use zoning, which would see workplaces and housing co-existing in the same neighborhoods. Eureka's Old Town is often cited as a good example of this type of mix, with commercial spaces on the ground floor and apartments above. The cities and the county are also expected to increase the density of buildings in urban areas, while adding many new miles of bike lanes to streets and roads.

Newer forms of transportation, such as e-bikes and scooters, are also encouraged in the plan, as are ride-sharing and car-sharing apps to reduce single-passenger car trips. Remote work, popularized during the COVID-19 pandemic, is also encouraged. Employers and schools can offer free transit passes to reduce the number of car trips. More park-and-ride lots would allow commuters to drive to a centralized bus stop and leave their cars parked while they take the bus.

New buildings would have to be "electrification ready" with a minimum 200-amp service and wiring in place to support electric water heaters and stoves. Everything possible would be done to encourage home and business owners to swap out old polluting appliances for clean electrical ones, and cities and the county are encouraged to require all-electric construction for new homes.

The CAP also supports the Redwood Coast Offshore Wind Project, as well as the installation of home solar electrical systems. This corresponds to state law, which now requires all new homes to install solar panels. Diesel generators, which serve as back-up for municipal facilities, such as water and sewage treatment plants, should be replaced by paired solar and battery storage systems, according to the plan. (The city of Rio Dell is already doing this.)

To reduce methane, the CAP encourages zero-waste programs, as well as installing composting facilities for food waste and green waste as now required by Senate Bill 1383, and improving recycling opportunities.

The CAP also supports land use policies that protect forests, farms and watersheds, as well as the "urban forests" on streets, in yards and parks.

"Measures that incentivize keeping forests as forests can be the most effective measure to maintain and increase carbon storage in Humboldt County forests," the plan states.

Restoring the wetlands around Humboldt Bay is highly recommended under the plan, for both reducing the effects of sea level rise and because wetlands are excellent at keeping carbon out of the atmosphere.

The CAP, of course, is a work in progress. To be successful, it must get buy-in from the public, and must actively find ways to reduce the front-end costs of residents' going carbon-free. While a great many people may want solar panels, electric cars or heat pumps, the cost may be prohibitive, even with rebates and tax credits.

One local resident, who asked not to be identified, said they "wanted to do the right thing for the climate" and planned to replace their home gas-powered heating system with an electric heat pump. The resident quickly changed their mind after getting a bid of $23,000 from a local contractor.

The mathematically-minded look forward to seeing the numerous appendices to the CAP, in which all the calculations are laid out.

Nonetheless, the environmental community seems supportive of the plan.

"Once the CAP is finalized, it is imperative that the board of supervisors, city councils and other decision-making bodies implement its recommendations," said Environmental Protection Information Center Executive Director Tom Wheeler. "We cannot let this plan sit on a shelf and collect dust. With important elections coming up for supervisorial and city council seats, we need to elect climate leaders who understand the urgency of this moment. The CAP can serve as a to-do list for our local governments. Environmental voters will hold elected leaders accountable." ●

Have you heard? Humboldt County has a brand new radio station – and it's online!

Humboldt Hot Air is Arcata's newest online radio station broadcasting from the creamery district. Humboldt Hot Air is a program of Playhouse Arts, and we have been broadcasting for about 6 months. We are proud to be a diverse bunch of radio folk; some of us have been doing radio for 40 years (keep your eyes out for familiar KHSU names), some of us have dabbled in radio, and some of us never dreamed we would have our very own show! Additionally, we have a wide scope of content for any Humboldt listener– from jazz to folk, metal to latin, and a couple talk shows scattered throughout. We think you'll find at least one show to love. Who are we? We are a group of artists, musicians, activists, and educators who see internet radio as a platform to amplify our art and the art of those we love! We are also very excited to collaborate with local organizations. So how do you listen? Head over to humboldthotair.org and click "stream live," to listen live. It's that easy! You can also find our full program schedule there to see what the week has in store. COVID, Bedbugs Derail Students' Europe Trip

A Northern Humboldt Unified High School District trip to Europe has been derailed by COVID-19 outbreaks, leaving some students in locked quarantine facilities overseas and parents scrambling for information amid rising frustrations.

"It's a fucking nightmare," said Rae Robison, whose son, an Arcata High School student, was on the trip and, as of April 22, being held in a hotel that's been converted into an Italian government-run quarantine center in Rome.

According to Robison and other parents, the trip, planned by the educational travel company EF Tours, included 68 students from multiple schools' AP Europe classes and about 10 chaperones, and set out during the schools' springs breaks. The group landed around 11 a.m. on April 12 in London, where it spent three days, before moving on to three days in France and then Italy.

According to parents' Facebook posts and interviews with the Journal, some students quickly began experiencing COVID-19 symptoms.

"Immediately upon arrival in London, kids were sick — runny noses, sore throats — and a chaperone was coughing," said Angelina Torres, whose 17-year-old daughter, a student of Arcata High School, was on the trip.

At the first stop in Italy — Milan — students and chaperones were offered

COVID-19 tests, though Torres said no one — including people experiencing symptoms — was forced to take them. Robison said about 10 students and two chaperones tested positive, including her son's roommate. Those who tested negative or did not test — including close contacts of those who tested positive, like Robison's son — were not required to quarantine and continued traveling.

Torres said she believes COVID-19 protocols — like EF Tours' pledges to keep students masked while in transit — were not adhered to.

While Robison's son initially tested negative, she said he began feeling symptomatic the following day and asked to be tested again, but was told no additional tests were available. The decision was made — it's unclear whether by local staff acting as chaperones or EF Tours — to leave the COVID-positive students in Milan with chaperones while the rest of the group continued on to Rome. Once there, another 12 students tested positive, including Robison's son, as well as three chaperones. Those who tested negative — including close contacts — were allowed to resume travel plans and visited the Vatican before boarding flights home.

The group of students and chaperones who tested positive, however, were not allowed to stay at the hotel EF Tours had booked them and instead were transferred to the government facility. A chaperone who emailed parents described the group being greeted by military police and their jeep, prompting them to realize "this was not going to be the quarantine we expected." According to the chaperone, protocols at the facility are strict and students are not allowed to leave their rooms, some of which were found to have bedbugs.

Parents said they worried about their children's mental health in isolation and the district made counseling services available to them via video conferencing.

The group in Rome was retested April 26, with five students testing negative and the rest of the students and chaperones still testing positive. Those who tested negative were said to be en route back to Humboldt County with a chaperone as the Journal went to press, while those who tested positive were slated to remain in the isolation center to be tested again April 28.

Those who tested positive in Milan, meanwhile, had all tested negative and headed home.

Student advocates push for Indigenous curriculum countywide

By Carly Wipf

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

In an effort to reshape the way schools teach about Indigenous issues, two local student activists are pushing to get a new Native American-focused curriculum in schools throughout the region.

In 2020, local Indigenous leaders and educators from Cal Poly Humboldt and local nonprofit Save California Salmon released a curriculum called the Advocacy and Water Protection in Native California High School Curriculum. The 93-page curriculum, which comes complete with lesson plans and a companion teachers guide to additional resources, is aligned to state Common Core Standards and provides teachers a framework for adding Indigenous history and knowledge to existing courses and lessons.

Arcata High School seniors Isaiah Levy and LeMonie Hutt have led the charge on campus to get the curriculum into their classrooms, working from different perspectives. Hutt, a Hoopa Valley Tribal member and president of the Arcata High Native American Club, learned about the it while interning for Save California Salmon, a driving force behind its creation. Levy, meanwhile, was working as a local director of organizing for the statewide student-led social justice group GENup. Both students said they were disturbed by the lack of culturally informed lessons surrounding Indigenous peoples and wanted to help make a change.

“The curriculum that is used today to talk about Indigenous people is often said in the past tense, like we’re not existent,” Hutt said. “[It] is used to assimilate Native people to this narrative that colonization and westward expansion is, like, this superior thing.”

Above: The Advocacy and Water Protection in Native California High School Curriculum comes complete with lesson plans and teacher resources, and puts an emphasis on hands-on experiences, like traditional dug-out canoe rides. Submitted

Right: Arcata High School Senior LeMonie Hutt, a Hoopa Valley Tribal member, has been instrumental in getting the Northern Humboldt Unified School District to adopt the curriculum and incorporate Native perspectives and knowledge in a number of its schools’ courses. Submitted

Hutt pointed to the creation of the U.S. boarding school system in the 19th century that sought to eradicate Indigenous culture by forcing youth to relinquish their traditions, languages and even families.

“The curriculum we’re trying to introduce into the school system is us as Native people reclaiming our educational experience,” Hutt said.

Even as a non-native student, Levy said he often feels his education isn’t tailored enough to Humboldt, Del Norte and Trinity counties, which are home to 11 tribes, rancherias and sovereign tribal governments, with Arcata High School sitting in the heart of the Wiyot ancestral territory.

“I think having an educational opportunity like this curriculum that is truly special to Humboldt County and Arcata High will excite kids and make them feel like they’re learning about the place that they’ve grown up and the world around them rather than just about the same world that’s taught to every kid that grows up in California for the last 20 years,” Levy said.

The students said they are particularly excited about the element of the curriculum that will bring guest speakers with have years of Indigenous expertise to share into local classrooms.

“I’ve been talking to the members of the Native American club about introducing a curriculum like this and they’re so excited because they’ve grown up on tribal ecological knowledge and tribal history and tribal government,” Hutt said. “But, you know, they weren’t seeing it represented in their classroom, they weren’t seeing themselves represented in their classroom and kind of just like, watching kind of, like their history being erased ... I feel like it’s going to be really inspiring to

Advocacy and Water Protection curriculum touches on traditional ecological knowledge, Native history and water law. According to Save California Salmon Co-director Regina Chichizola, it is designed to be integrated into other classes and subjects rather than to create a stand-alone class. For example, lessons about the Fish Wars — a series of protests in the 1960s and 1970s by tribes across the Pacific Northwest over government restrictions of their fishing rights — can easily be included in history classes during discussions of the Civil Rights Movement, while lessons on Indigenous relationships to rivers and diminishing salmon populations can be included in existing science classes. This approach makes it easier for districts, schools and teachers to incorporate the curriculum into existing courses rather than having to create a new program, while also ensuring Indigenous perspectives are included in various classrooms.

“We want all different subjects and lessons for Native people to be taught in a better way,” Chichizola said. “We don’t want to just learn about, ‘There’s a dam built over here’ — What watershed? Whose people’s land is that? Is there a way to manage that watershed better? How does traditional ecological knowledge and science fit into the science that we’re learning in schools already?”

Cutcha Rising Baldy, an associate professor who chairs Cal Poly Humboldt’s Native American Studies Department, said the next generation of youth face mounting issues surrounding climate change and resource scarcity. Teaching about indigenous management practices and learning to respect those practices, she said, will help students understand their responsibility for and connection to the ecosystem.

“Management practices of Indigenous peoples have been proven time and again to really be good at showing what a sustainable practice actually looks like,” Baldy said. “An integrated practice that values relationship and responsibility allows us to make sure that the species — human and salmon alike — are thriving in an ecosystem that’s healthy for everyone.”

The curriculum also contains a section on advocacy and creating informational campaigns so students can learn how to effect change on issues the care about, like whether it be river health, fishing rights or food security.

Hutt said she also sees the curriculum as a way to prepare non-Native students for jobs in which they may work closely

"Whether you want a job in city council or if you want a job all the way up into the White House, you're going to be interfacing with tribal history and tribal sovereignty and tribal land rights," Hutt said. "It's really preparing the students for government jobs and also for environmental jobs. Like if you work for fisheries, you're going to be interfacing with the impact the Fish Wars have and salmon have on tribal people, and also you're going to be implementing tribal ecological knowledge. It's really going to prepare students in a new way."

Together, Hutt and Levy drafted and circulated a letter of support for the curriculum and presented it to teachers who signed as a pledge to implement it in their classrooms.

While portions of it have been taught at Hoopa Valley High School and schools in Del Norte County, Chichizola said it may take time for the curriculum to become a staple of high school education.

Save California Salmon has been hosting a training on the curriculum at Cal Poly Humboldt for teachers, with Hutt addressing the educators as a part of a youth panel on April 2.

Hutt and Levy even met over Zoom with Northern Humboldt High School District Superintendent Roger Macdonald, gaining his support for implementing the curriculum districtwide.

"As educators, we must look at this place that we all call home as a powerful context for our students to grow and learn in," Macdonald said. "This means teaching hard histories about genocide and colonization. It also means learning about Native peoples' resistance, advocacy and traditional ecological knowledge."

Macdonald said the work was "long overdue" and that he was "very impressed" with the students' effort.

Levy hopes to pass the torch of advocating for the curriculum's incorporation into local classrooms to younger students after he graduates in the spring. Meanwhile, Hutt, who has been protesting and speaking at California State Water Board meetings since she was 8 years old, also created a video for her peers about how to effectively engage in public testimony.

Both Hutt and Levy said they plan to continue their advocacy efforts in college — Hutt at Harvard University and Levy at Columbia University — having already left a legacy at and beyond Arcata High School.

"Roger Macdonald's reaction was even more positive than I was honestly even hoping for," Levy said. "I have a younger sibling at the school and I think he'll most likely get some of the curriculum taught to him in his U.S. History class next year, which is really exciting to me." ●

New chefs in former Gonsea, Angelo's and Manzanilla kitchens

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

Curry Leaf to sprout at the former Gonsea

Years of sitting empty have left the exterior of Gonsea run down and graffiti covered, a grim greeting upon entering Eureka from the north. Before its closure by the health department for refrigeration, storage and sanitation violations in 2017, the spacious Chinese restaurant at 2335 Fourth St. had a steady following. And in the coming months, new occupants hope to breathe life back into the spot. Chef Joe Tan, who helmed the sushi bar at Eureka's Bayfront and partnered to open Nori in Arcata ("Hot Plates Coming Through at Nori," April 7, 2021), has leased the building.

He and Alek Tan (no relation, though they hail from the same mountain town in Malaysia), who was forced to close his Flushing, New York, restaurant during the pandemic, plan to open a Malaysian-Chinese place tentatively named Curry Leaf. Joe Tan says diners can expect "Some flavors like Thai and Indian, like curries," spanning the cuisine of cosmopolitan Singapore, with Indian and Southeast Asian influences, and specialties like laksa noodle soup.

Joe says a prospective owner updated the restrooms and other sections of the interior before packing in plans for a tempyaki restaurant, but there's still plenty of work to do. "The kitchen, it's very messy and very old. ... Pretty much we had to redo a lot of stuff," he says, including replacing appliances and the walk-in freezer, as well as the prep station. The exterior is up to the landlord but, barring issued with appliance delivery, he hopes to open in July. But that's not the only project he has in the works.

Slices of Chicago and Detroit in Eureka

In February, Joe Tan also bought the old Angelo's building (215 W Seventh St., Eureka), wherein many a Humboldt kid whiled away hours and quarters playing video games and eating pizza. It, too, was shuttered by the health department in 2021 for a list of violations, including a rat infestation, unclean prep areas and improper food storage and refrigeration. Undaunted, Tan has brought in pest control and after he makes the fixes the health department requires, he plans to update the dining room and game area, as well as add a beer garden. The goal is to restore a family dining vibe with a difference: food trucks in the front lot.

"That's gonna be fun, you know — people can come in and get all kinds of food," he says. It's not as simple as inviting a few trucks to park, though, as he'll need city approval and additional power outlets. And while he's considered setting up a ramen shop, the kitchen is built for pizza. "I don't know about pizza," Tan says with a laugh. Luckily, he knows a guy.

Humboldt Bay Bistro chef and co-owner Brett Obra, who grew up in Detroit, is renting the kitchen to make Detroit- and Chicago-style pizzas, as well as standard hand-tossed thin-crust. "Everybody has these wood fired brick ovens," says Obra. "I'm not a fan. I'm from the Midwest."

Following a power washing and paint job, Obra will be tuning up or replacing some equipment. He's stocked up on supplies in the Motor City, including the blue steel pans — originally used in the automotive industry — in which they're baked. The square pans are key to making the signature thick pie with cheese that runs all the way to the browned edges, topped with tomato sauce instead of layering it under the cheese. He's also got deep, round Chicago pans for the fork-and-knife pizza also heretofore unavailable in Humboldt.

"I'm basically bringing my family's recipes from Detroit," says Obra, who plans to start in July with a brief takeout and delivery menu with three styles of pizza, three soups, three salads, three sandwiches and three pastas. He says he's eager to cater to families again and has fond memories of eating at the old Angelo's. "I used to eat the pizzas there all the time," he says, though he's not trying to recreate it. "It's gonna be all new."

Cambodian cuisine in Henderson Center

Since the owner of the building housing Annie's Cambodian Cuisine in Eureka submitted plans to demolish it and build a Starbucks and another chain restaurant in its place, the search has been on for a new spot for the popular family-owned Southeast Asian restaurant ("Eureka's Appetite for Fast-food Chains," March 10). Now, after weeks of negotiation, Annie's has landed new digs in Henderson Center, though the Fifth Street location is still open for business. (Don't let the plywood on the door — the result of a break-in last month — fool you.)

On Wednesday, a smiling Chin Chau was at 2850 F St., getting to work on the former brick-and-mortar home of food truck Manzanilla. Over the phone, Laura Chau-Yang says, "We still have to do some changes so we can cook Cambodian type cuisine in there." The multiple ovens — including a pizza oven — aren't geared for the kind of noodle, rice, hot pot and stir-fry dishes Annie and Chin Chau have been turning out downtown. "We definitely need a wok burner — those are special because of how big they are and the heat they need," she says, adding that a custom-built one is on order to handle the new location's larger capacity.

Chau-Yang says since customers have always enjoyed eating at the bar and chatting with staff, they'll also be building a bar. All that renovation means they'll need approval from the city along with the usual health department inspections. Between the paperwork and the changes to the space, as well as moving equipment and the paintings, statues and other artwork Annie imported from Cambodia, she says they hope to open in Henderson Center this summer.

Robbie and I lock our bikes a couple of minutes before the Herrick Avenue Park and Ride off U.S. Highway 101, where the Hikshari' Trail veers left. Then we walk ¼ mile over a wooden bridge and along the railroad track, turn right and stroll through grass to the closest thing to a beach this side of the Samoa Bridge.

I disrobe, deciding to have a quick dip in Humboldt Bay. Unlike the "real" beaches, this half-beach is usually calm, though not warm enough to seriously swim. Since Lycra is a pain to get in and out of, Robbie watches me from her perch on the sand. I dry off and we sit and talk: about our different camper vans, the road trip she took to the Southwest with an 88-year-old friend who still loves to hike, her daughter and grandchildren in Alameda, her son in Budapest, my sisters and hers, my 100-year-old father, the challenges of backpacking in wildfire-fraught California, and my winter in Mexico, where my husband, Barry, and I live part of the year.

I love the bicycle rides we take every couple of weeks along the Hikshari' Trail, the Wiyot place name for this area, but the diversion to the beach is especially fun because we get to talk. The only downside of riding a bike is that it's not easy to chat side by side.

We met through a mutual friend. Robbie and a pack of other bicyclist nurses who all worked at St. Joseph Hospital decades ago gather in San Francisco once a year, staying at the hostel at Fort Mason and spending a weekend cycling around the city, going to performances and doing fun city stuff. I was invited to join the group and rode down to the city with Robbie in her car. (No, we didn't cycle!)

Today, she showed up at my door around 9:15 a.m. with her road bike. Robbie had already ridden a couple of miles, having driven down from her home in Kneeland, parked her car at the Open Door clinic and cycled on the Waterfront Trail to my and my husband Barry's apartment in Old Town. In her younger years, Robbie was one serious cyclist. When her kids were little, every so often she'd come home from her nursing job and cycle 30-40 miles before dinner. Before joining me, she not only would have ridden down from Kneeland, but then ridden all the way back up.

I knew intimately how steep the road up to her home is because one year Barry and I cycled there for a party. We took turns riding my folding bike and the electric bike Barry jury-rigged a few years ago from another one we had. When I was on the folding bike, I could only go about two minutes before my calves were screaming. Never again.

I climbed onto my bike and off we went, crossing C Street to the start of the southern section of the trail. Occasionally, we cycle all the way to the Headwaters trailhead, past the covered bridges I love. But this time we planned to turn around at the parking lot off the Herrick Avenue and U.S. Highway 101 interchange, then ride back a little way to the trail that leads to the beach.

We headed out past the Balloon Tract, passing walkers, runners, people with dogs and other cyclists — such an improvement from when Barry and I first moved here 21 years ago, when there was no paved pedestrian path to the Bayshore Mall. Now plans are underway to extend the trail to Humboldt Hill.

As we passed the Wharfinger, I told Robbie how Barry and I spent a night in our Westy camper on the road past the building when we were on our reconnaissance trip to the North Coast, trying to decide where to plant ourselves. We'd never have guessed we'd still be renting the same loft-like apartment all these years later.

Soon after, the bike trail crosses First Street. We passed Costco on our left, the fisherman's pier on our right, and the dog park with the Adirondack chairs perched on the small hill, facing the bay. Nice touch. Robbie told me how when she moved here from Southern California in the 1970s, she was delighted by the clean air and beauty;

We were riding parallel to the mall now. Grateful as I am for the Hikshari', I wish the planners had directed a bike path to the mall itself. To reach it, you have to get off your bike and awkwardly negotiate a narrow, muddy path, making sure you don't get your shoes wet — doable, but not simple. Instead, the trail was built in the compartmentalized way of the U.S., assuming no one actually uses it for practical matters like going shopping, the way they might in, say, Amsterdam.

At the end of the mall, we reached Truesdale Street, which takes you to the far end of the mall. Then we passed what used to be the infamous Devil's Playground, the homeless encampment dismantled in 2016. I wondered where all those people are staying now.

Now the trail was framed in gentle spring green, making up for the lack of bay views that the northern part of the waterfront trail has. Before long, we reached the parking lot by U.S. Highway 101. By June, farmers will be selling cherries and other goodies on Elk River Road, on the other side of the highway.

After our interlude at the beach, we retraced our ride back to Old Town. Once Robbie brought her recumbent bike. I tried it but was nervous I'd topple over. They say once you learn how to ride a bike, you never forget but I think it's different with a recumbent.

We paused at my apartment before Robbie set off to finish her ride back to the clinic and hugged goodbye for the first time since the start of COVID. It was only 11 a.m. and a whole day of promise still lay ahead. ●

Super Sunday Awaits Saltwater Anglers

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

The Super Bowl of saltwater sport fishing will take place this Sunday on the North Coast as salmon, rockfish and Pacific halibut are all set to open. It's pretty rare for the big three to all open on the same day, and there's a ton of excitement around the docks. And it's looking like the key marine factors are lining up. The water temperatures off Eureka are right around 51 to 52 degrees, perfect for salmon. The recent north winds have spurred the ocean upwelling, kicking the food chain into high gear. The tide will bottom out when most boats are heading out, making for an easier bar crossing. And as of Tuesday, for 10 miles offshore, winds will be out of the northwest 5 to 10 knots with waves 7 feet at 12 seconds. All that's left to do now is find the fish.

May 1 openers:

Salmon: Our 2022 ocean sport salmon season will open this Sunday and run through May 31. The season will open back up Aug. 1 and run through Sept. 5. It will be open from the Oregon-California border south to the 40°10' line (near Cape Mendocino), (Klamath Management Zone). Fishing is allowed seven days per week for all salmon except coho, two fish per day and a minimum size limit of 20 inches total length. The possession limit is no more than two daily bag limits in possession while on land. On a vessel in ocean waters, no person shall possess or bring ashore more than one daily bag limit. No salmon punch card is required for ocean salmon fishing. The sport season from the 40°10' line to Point Arena, which includes Shelter Cove and Fort Bragg, will also open May 1 and run through July 4. It will reopen July 22 and run through Sept. 5. For complete ocean salmon regulations, please visit the Ocean Salmon webpage at www.wildlife.ca.gov/Fishing/Ocean/Regulations/Salmon or call the Ocean Salmon Regulations Hotline at 576-3429.

Pacific Halibut: The 2022 Pacific halibut season will run from May 1 to Nov. 15, or until the quota is reached, whichever is earlier. The 2022 quota for the California sport fishery is 38,740 pounds — approximately the same as the 2021 quota. CDFW will monitor catches of Pacific halibut during the season and provide catch projection updates on the CDFW Pacific halibut webpage, www.wildlife.ca.gov/conservation/marine/pacific-halibut#31670772-in-season-tracking. The limit remains at one, with no size restrictions. No more than one line with two hooks attached can be used.

Rockfish: The boat-based rockfish season in the Northern Management Area, which runs from the California-Oregon border to the 40°10' North latitude (near Cape Mendocino), will run through Oct. 31 within 180 feet. From Nov. 1 through Dec. 31, rockfish may be taken at any depth.

New sport rockfish regulations for 2022

In December of 2021, CDFW announced multiple changes to the sport rockfish regulations starting in 2022. Changes to the sub-bag limits within the 10-fish daily Rockfish, Cabezon, Greenling (RCG) complex bag and possession limit include:

- A decrease to the statewide sub-bag limit for vermilion rockfish from five to four fish
- A new statewide sub-bag limit for quillback rockfish of one fish
- A new statewide sub-bag limit for copper rockfish of one fish

The daily bag limit of lingcod remains at two per person and they must be 22 inches in length. The take and possession of cowcod, bronzespotted rockfish and yelloweye rockfish is prohibited statewide. Petrale sole and starry flounder can be retained year-round at all depths with no size limit. For more information about recreational groundfish regulations within the northern management area, visit www.wildlife.ca.gov/Fishing/Ocean/Regula-

Hank Mautz, of Redding, holds a canary rockfish and a lingcod taken last year near Cape Mendocino. The 2022 rockfish Pacific halibut and salmon seasons all open on Sunday, May 1.

Important reminder:

When fishing for halibut, rockfish and salmon, or any combination of the three, the more restrictive gear and depth restrictions apply. When targeting salmon, or once salmon are aboard and in possession, anglers are limited to using barbless hooks (barbless circle hooks if fishing south of Horse Mountain) when fishing for other species.

When targeting rockfish, cabezon, greenling and lingcod, or once any of these species are aboard and in possession, anglers are limited to fishing in waters shallower than 180 feet when fishing for other species.

How we grow matters

Weekenders

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

As is sometimes the case in the re-emerging world of local live entertainment in which we find ourselves, the good shows are simply not spread out evenly across the week. Drat. Don't worry about it because the offerings this weekend are top-notch, with national touring talent vying with some of our best local acts for your time and attention. We are truly in the glutton's dilemma here, with the choice cuts happening in a small window of time. That's fine though, a little feast and famine now and again brings perspective. And I've added some suggestions that will hopefully pad the menu a bit. Enjoy.

Thursday

Cal Poly Humboldt is putting on its Local Bands Night at the campus Student Activities Center at 8 p.m. (free). Although this event is probably more geared toward students, it is technically open to the public and, while I know next to nothing about the participating bands, I hear tell of a couple of acts called Cowboydaddy and Shaggy Joon. Intriguing.

Meanwhile, a half hour later over at the Miniplex, there's a special addition of everyone's favorite microphone-sharing ad hoc talent show. Y2Karaoke is, as the name suggests, a celebration of pop bangers from the hinge point of the most recent millennium. Right when I was a teenager, in fact, which means that I will probably be absent because, like a lot of haters, I have no rosy-tinted glasses for the cultural forms of my youth. Y'all enjoy, though.

Friday

As my intro suggested, the weekend is here and I'm stacking these days with a heavy roster of shows to make up for sparseness come Monday. The first entry in tonight's trio of delights is going down at 7 p.m. at the Arcata Theatre Lounge, when Bay Area bluegrass fusion band Hot Buttered Rum treads the boards and shares some pickin' and grinnin'. In a two-decades career the quintet has built a reputation for its progressive, multi-genre take on the hardest of the acoustic arts. Get in the door the night of with $25; $20 buys an advance ticket and $15 will secure an "early bird" ticket that will likely not be available as of press time.

The Jacob Jolliff Band plays Saturday, April 30 at 8 p.m. at the Arcata Playhouse.

Two hours later and two-ish blocks away at Humbrews, you will find another Bay Area-ish institution doing its thing, as two of the most famous members of San Francisco/Los Angeles hip hop collective Living Legends, The Grouch and Eligh return to Humboldt in year three of the Plague Age ($25, $20 advance). These two always find a very appreciative crowd up here so the live frisson should be all over the dance floor. DJ Fresh and AmpLive will be slinging the beats.

Finally tonight, at the same hour, music is once again on tap at The Logger Bar, in this case a brand new group called White Meat is making its like debut. Because I can't describe that which has not happened yet, I'll let you bask in the mystery of this show and decide accordingly (free).

Saturday

If you thought last night was packed, I've added yet one more show to tonight's lineup, as we celebrate the last day of T.S. Eliot's "cruellest month." (Note his extra "L.") Canary and the Vamp continues its triumphant crawl out of hibernation, returning to the scene of the crime for a live show tonight at 8 p.m. (free). The scene in question is The Logger Bar, where the group filmed its first music video earlier this month, which is technically not a crime, but the song in question is called "OK Corral," so some criminal elements were certainly at play, if only in the lyrics.

At the same time over at the Arcata Playhouse, mandolin virtuoso Jacob Jolliff brings his Band to the stage. No, not the Yonder Mountain String Band, that's his other gig. Rather this is Mr. Jolliff's own handpicked group of hand pickers, all of whom play among the rarified air of the string gods with their combined talents. Only $20 at the door, $18 for members and seniors.

The Miniplex is hosting one of my favorite Humco bands, as Shively's Blackplate returns to Arcata for a night of heart-rending sonics at 8:30 p.m. Also on board are two more local acts that I have not yet had the pleasure to hear: Silver & Nails and Phosphorus. Blackplate singer/string-slinger Sean Casement tells me that admission is a sliding scale/gas donation, so I suggest you dig deep if you can — that amber liquid isn't cheap these days.

One thing that has proved recession-proof is the cost of admission to Soul Party over at Humbrews. For a pre-inflation $5 at 9 p.m. you can still get into the best vinyl dance party north of the 1970s and tonight even has a dance contest at midnight with a cash prize on the line. Viva.

Sunday (International Workers Day)

No music, however, Savage Henry has a special midnight comedy show featuring the talents of Sara Rooker from Reno, Andrea B. from Tahoe and Gabby Jesus from somewhere, Oregon. Only $10.

Monday and Tuesday

These are the aforementioned dead days. However, here's a thought: Monday is the 76th anniversary of the beginning of the Battle of Alcatraz, a multi-day prison riot that captivated the nation as its deadly drama unfolded. In the following year, Burt Lancaster starred in a gritty noir film called Brute Force partly inspired by those events. Maybe see if you can track down a copy and enjoy it.

Wednesday

I hate to do it but here's another movie night. This one takes place at the Arcata Theatre Lounge at 6 p.m., as a part of its ongoing Sci Fi Night series. The film is Paul Verhoeven's ultra-violent satirical classic Starship Troopers. Set in a world full of gleeful fascism, where the only path to full citizenship is through participation in hyper-deadly space warfare with a remorseless enemy, it should serve as a sample of things to come for all the kiddos in the audience ($5). ●

Celebrate spring and the coming of summer at the Splendid Spring May Day Festival, Sunday, May 1 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Arcata Plaza (free). The festival will have an art market, school fundraising food booths, a Healing Arts Fair, a community Maypole Dance, a Butterfly Parade, live music, performances, gifts for Mother's Day and more. The event is presented by Arcata Main Street and Coastal Grove Charter School PTO and is hosted by everybody's favorite party planner/fairy extraordinaire/Middle Eastern dancer, Shoshanna. Flit on down and join the fun.

May the Fourth Be with You (and also with you) festivities at Sequoia Park Zoo are a special treat for Padawans and Jedis alike. On Wednesday (you guessed it), May 4, the zoo is putting on a special Star Wars-themed event that includes stellar kids activities like an obstacle course, space-themed temporary tattoos, a crafts table and a meet-and-greet photo opportunity with Ewok actor Kevin Thompson. The all-ages fun goes from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. and an after-hours event with cantina-themed cocktails and DJ music (for those old enough to order the hard stuff at Mos Eisley) goes from 6 to 8:30 p.m. (free). Reservations are required. Go to www.sequoiaparkzoo.net for the info, then get those cinnamon rolls strapped to your head and get on down there, Princess.

Heads up, Humboldt: While the county's masking mandate has been lifted, Public Health is still strongly recommending masking indoors in public, social distancing and "avoiding crowds and poorly ventilated spaces." COVID-19 is still with us, so be sure to check the protocols at event venues.

NCJ FIELD NOTES

Josiah Gregg in California

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

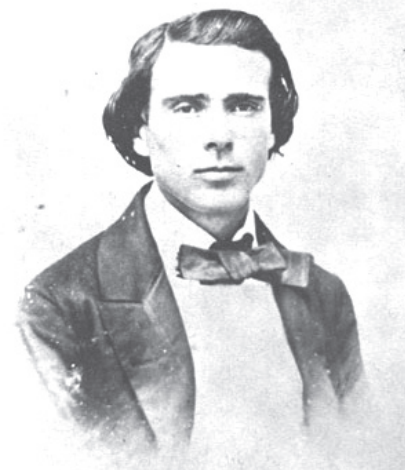

“Here commenced an expedition, the marked and prominent features of which were constant and unmitigated toil, hardship, privation, and suffering.”

— From the journal of Lewis Keyser Wood, published in the Humboldt Times, April, 1856

Picking up where we left off last week (“Josiah Gregg: Prairie Years,” April 21): After two decades of prairie living in the southwest, both in the U.S. and Mexico, Josiah Gregg was captivated by the lure of Californian gold. For a man who claimed his health improved markedly on the plains while breathing “the purity of the atmosphere of those elevated unembarrassed regions,” it surely was a risky move to head into the wilds of Northern California. But Gregg’s life had been full of risks thus far, so when he sailed from Mazatlán for San Francisco in the summer of 1849, I imagine he was looking forward to another great adventure.

Upon his arrival, he would have heard the latest “gold fever” news: Maj. Pierson Reading had found gold on a sandbar on the Trinity River, just six months after the original Sutter Mill strike hundreds of miles south. Soon Gregg, accompanied as always by his sextant, compass and botanical gear, was checking out placer mines on the Trinity. In late October of 1849, he was at Rich Bar mining camp, 3 miles north of Helena (just off present-day State Route 299), proposing an expedition to the coast. Local Native people had described a sheltered bay on the Pacific eight days walk west of the camp. The idea of finding an east-west route to service miners on the Trinity and perhaps laying claim to property on the coast must have looked appealing at first blush.

So it was that on Nov. 5, 1849, Gregg and seven others, with provisions for 10 days, headed westward into unknown territory. Two Native guides quit after an early snowfall covered any existing trails, so the ill-equipped party was forced to find its own route. They negotiated ridge after ridge of mountains after attempting, unsuccessfully, to follow the Trinity to the sea. Six harrowing weeks later, they reached the Pacific at the mouth of Little River. (Although historians know that L.K. Wood wasn’t a 100 percent reliable source, his account of the expedition is the only one we have, as told several years later to the editor of the Humboldt Times.)

Heading south, the group borrowed Native canoes to cross a river. However, Gregg first wanted to establish the latitude of the river mouth, to the irritation of the other tired and hungry men. They crossed without him and when he finally caught up, Gregg “opened upon us a perfect battery of the most withering and violent abuse,” according to Wood. The water body thus acquired its present settler name, Mad River.

Having “discovered” Qual-a-wa-loo, aka Humboldt Bay, they were eager to return to “civilization” to report this potential shortcut to the Trinity mining camps, but dissension resulted in the group splitting. Four men, led by Wood, headed down the South Fork of the Eel, thence to the Sonoma Valley; the other four, under Gregg, originally stayed close to the coast but, finding this too difficult in winter, went east to emerge into the Sacramento Valley. Gregg, the “old gentleman” of the group (he was 43), didn’t make it. Weak from starvation, he died hours after falling off his horse near Clear Lake, though accounts vary and he may have survived briefly in a Native village.

Within weeks of the return of the remaining expedition members, ships headed north out of San Francisco to the newly “found” bay. On April 9, 1850, the first of these, the Laura Virginia, entered it. Her captain Douglas Ottinger named the bay after Alexander von Humboldt, the Prussian naturalist-explorer who would, had he met him, have found much in common with Josiah Gregg. ●

The Northman's Ferocious Power

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

THE NORTHMAN. In hindsight, I should probably have been kinder to The Witch (2015). At the time, I damned it with faint praise, basically comparing it unfavorably to some of the cheekier arthouse horror movies of the moment. As I think I said then, this was due to shortsightedness on my part but also to the misbegotten marketing strategy for The Witch, touting as the new scariest movie of all time. To be fair, it is an ominous, often frightening examination of supernatural terror, but it is also much more than that.

Without any context for it, for one thing, it was easy to dismiss the movie's painstaking attention to period detail, down to the finer points of spoken language and the day-to-day tasks of carving a life from an unforgiving landscape. Simultaneously, I was too quick to gloss over the finely constructed, remarkably confident and complete design sensibility of the piece. In hindsight, it becomes clear The Witch marked the debut of an actual cinematic visionary and we are granted precious few of those these days.

The visionary in question is of course writer-director Robert Eggers, who, now with three features on his CV, has unknowingly shamed me for my tepid response to his debut. Maybe time has made me less cynical, more open-hearted; seems doubtful.

But I can now see The Witch as a remarkably accomplished, quietly assured (if imperfect) first salvo from an artist with an acutely attuned sense of aesthetics, a distinct set of skills and interests and a rare ability to control the totality of a movie production and emerge with work of singular vision. He also introduced us to Anya Taylor-Joy, who has proven herself one of the boldest, most skillful and most compelling actors of her generation (and possibly of the generation or two before).

Eggers' second feature, The Lighthouse (2019) helps illuminate the intentions of his debut, creating a continuum of existential dread, horrific intimacy and intricate connection of narrative to place that have now come to define his body of work. The Lighthouse, all shadows, wind and personal desolation shot in a claustrophobic aspect ratio and mesmerizing black and white, is a very different proposition altogether, but cements an intentionality and precision that have become trademarks of Eggers' cinema. It also, despite an even smaller setting and more constricted narrative, allows an expansion of his cinematic technique, his painterly compositions, often elliptical character arcs and close examination of humanity's torturous relationship with its environment.

All of which carries through in his latest, a folklorist's psychedelic freakout version of a Viking revenge story. The Northman (co-written with Sjón) is undeniably Eggers' biggest, most ambitious production to date, but is carried off with such deceptive ease and masterly craft (credit to his longtime director of photography Jarin Blaschke) that it submerges the viewer in its atmosphere, rather than allowing its tremendous style to become the primary point of focus. It's technique in service of impossibly detailed narrative.

Because the inciting incident comes as a bit of surprise, I'll not ruin it beyond saying certain violent events in a North Atlantic Viking kingdom send its crown prince, Amleth (Oskar Novak) into exile, beating oars against an unforgiving sea.

When we meet him again, years later, he has become a hulking, blood-bathed berserker, a bear-wolf against whom few, if any, can stand in single combat. Amleth (Alexander Skarsgård), having obscured his lineage, has lived entirely fueled by hatred and vengeance, awaiting the moment when fate will allow him to administer it. Decades on, that moment arrives. Concealing himself among slaves captured in a raid in the Land of the Rus, Amleth makes his way to the Icelandic stronghold of the traitor who created him and his fated journey. Along the way, he befriends Olga (Taylor-Joy), an equally fierce warrior, albeit one trained in the destruction of men's minds.

In terms of pure cinematic technique, The Northman rivals anything I have seen in years, full stop. Its visual palette astounds, transitioning with impossible

When your bros break into the Capitol rotunda without you.

The Northman

aplomb from verdant riparian forests to volcanic hellscape to the hallucinatory gates of the afterlife. It weds technique, high art and ferocious violence in an unholy, transcendently enjoyable matrimony, while remaining impossibly faithful to historical accuracy and its source texts. The sheer volume of research, the uncountable hours spent weaving and forging this thing boggle the mind, but the totality of its vision, the immersive and fundamental satisfaction of it, disallow distraction. It is a complete, revelatory, sometimes humorous saga unlike any other, an exploration of myth but also of an often misunderstood ancient culture that embraced reverence and violence, the natural world and humanity's attempted taming of it, in equal measure.
